The Hawaiian Islands are ripe for the evolution of new species—or at least they were, not long after they burst from a volcanic hot spot in the floor of the Pacific Ocean. Several million years ago, Nihoa Island and some of the other old islands in the northwestern part of the chain were newborns. Barren rock, they provided a clean slate and fresh opportunities to any organism lucky enough to drift or be blown ashore, as long as it could survive and reproduce.

14. The environment on Nihoa island is most likely?

- a) desert
- b) tropical
- c) temperate
- d) tundra
